

THREE FOOTBALL WARRIORS OUT TO PRO CAMPS

Three members of George Dixon's Loyola Warriors for the past four seasons are currently attempting to make the grade in the monied ranks with Canadian Football League teams. All the players involved are linemen.

Two players are currently practicing with the Montreal Alouettes. College veterans Claude Beaudry (Dollard des Ormeaux), a guard, and Andy Malolepszy (St. Laurent), a linebacker, are vying for berths on Sam Etcheverry's defending Grey Cup champion Alouettes, not an easy thing to do. Both were conference All-Stars at Loyola, and played on the team that went through an undefeated regular season in 1968. Beaudry came up under the tutelage of Loyola's offensive line coach Tony Pajaczkowski, while Malolepszy was schooled under defensive specialist Pete Regimbald.

Dwayne Dudgeon (Beaconsfield), meanwhile, was drafted in the third round by the Calgary Stampeders and will be reporting to their training camp on June 20. An offensive end at Loyola, Dudgeon was known for his sure hands and tough blocking, and was always the first man downfield on kickoffs. This year he was voted as team Most Valuable Player.

Two former Loyola stars are currently playing in the C.F.L., Joe Poirier, class of '57, with the Ottawa Roughriders, and Brian Marcil, class of '70, with the Grey Cup finalist Calgary Stampeders.
